characterized by its steep slope and the hardness of its terrain, rock.

With these premises of environment and with the intention of making an exclusive and different project, we developed the project that today different project, we developed the project that today we identify as La Roca, a house that seeks to that seeks to obtain the best views towards the coast of Benalmádena to combine it with a perfect integration combine it with a perfect integration with its natural environment and orientation.

The base of the project starts from the garage and access to the house, inserting its architectural volume in the natural terrain, to occupy a space embraced by rocks.

architectural volume in the natural terrain, to occupy a space embraced by rocks, with access to its highest level through external stairs adapted to the topography and by an elevator that emerges above them, to give access to the house. The rest of the construction is implanted on two levels that start from the highest level of the terrain, a longitudinal volume integrated into the rock that houses the social level of the house, a floor consisting of a bathroom, an office and a large living-dining-kitchen of 50m² facing south and open to the more than 100m² of outdoor porch and 35m² of longitudinal pool. On this volume highlights its second level, an architectural body facing west to house the rest area of the house, a set of three large bedrooms with private bathroom with its perfect orientation to the west that allow you to appreciate the best sunsets of the Costa del Sol.

With all this we can say that our house La Roca is a unique and exclusive project in Benalmádena where the play of volumes combines perfectly with the nature of its environment to enjoy endless sunsets.
